Thailand, Southeast Asia's Leading Organics Producer, Exhibits for the First Time at Natural Products Expo East 2009

BOSTON (September 24, 2009) – Thailand, the number one organic producer in Southeast Asia, will introduce a wide variety of natural, high-quality products to the U.S. market in its debut at Natural Products Expo East 2009.

"Thailand is leading the way in Southeast Asia in organic food production, and we are delighted to have the chance to introduce to Americans Thai organic products that meet the highest food safety standards, are eco-friendly, and environmentally sustainable," said Rapibhat Chandarasrivongs, Minister for Agriculture, Office of Agricultural Affairs, Royal Thai Embassy, Washington, D.C.

"Because organic production has a long tradition in Thailand, our organic products are 100 percent natural and offer unique flavors and high quality to American consumers," said Minister Rapibhat.

Thailand aims to become the seventh country whose government is authorized by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to certify products under the Natural Organic Program (NOP). When the request is approved, which should be next year, Thailand will become the first country in Southeast Asia whose government is accredited by USDA to grant its organic logo to Thai products. The Thai Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives (MOAC) will manage the inspection of organic production and handling operations in the country and certify that they meet USDA standards.

"This will be an important step for us because U.S. consumers recognize and respond favorably to the green-and-white 'USDA Organic' label," Minister Rapibhat said.

Thai products being introduced at Expo East include baby corn snacks; red jasmine rice vermicelli and various shades of Hom Mali (jasmine) rice; rice porridge; fresh, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables; organic coconut milk and "lite" coconut milk, coconut water, and virgin coconut oil; dried herbs and organic essential herbal oils; organic curry and chili pastes; and Hom Mali rice vinegar.

"This will be an important step for us because U.S. consumers recognize and respond favorably to the green-and-white 'USDA Organic' label," Minister Rapibhat said.

Thai products being introduced at Expo East include baby corn snacks; red jasmine rice vermicelli and various shades of Hom Mali (jasmine) rice; rice porridge; fresh, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables; organic coconut milk and "lite" coconut milk, coconut water, and virgin coconut oil; dried herbs and organic essential herbal oils; organic curry and chili pastes; and Hom Mali rice vinegar.

Some natural Thai products already are gaining popularity in the United States, including organic Arabica coffee, which may be found in Starbucks nationwide and in most Asian supermarkets.

Other Thai organic products with great potential to succeed in the American marketplace include organic coconut, jasmine rice, shrimp, and asparagus.

The Thai government is strongly committed to the organic agriculture industry. The government has required substantial reductions in chemicals nationwide, to improve the environment and the health of farmers. Producers have seen their income rise as a result of national policies supporting organic farming.

During Natural Products Expo East 2009, Minister Rapibhat, other Office of Agricultural Affairs officials, Department of Agricultural Extension officials, and representatives of six Thai companies will be at the Thai booth (# 1373) to discuss Thai natural products, all of which are GMO-free.

The six Thai companies exhibiting at the Expo are: Top Organic Products and Supplies Co., Ltd.; Swift Co., Ltd.; Thai Organic Food Co., Ltd.; Green Net Cooperative; River Kwai International Food Industry Co., Ltd.; and Merit Food Products Co., Ltd.

The Office of Agricultural Affairs of the Royal Thai Embassy represents the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives (MOAC) in ensuring export of Thai agricultural products to the United States, promoting and facilitating Thai agricultural trade with the United States, and maintaining ties between MOAC and such organizations as the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration. THAI FOOD, NATURALLY!

THAI ORGANIC AGRICULTURE FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

What organic products does Thailand produce currently?

- Cereals and rice: rice vermicelli, Thai Hom Mali (jasmine) rice, white rice, brown rice, red rice, glutinous rice and specific traditional rice varieties;
- Exotic fruits and vegetables: mango, dragon fruit, mangosteen, mangosteen shell, papaya, pomelo, longan, sweet corn, baby corn, asparagus, green rosella, rambutans, bamboo shoots, fruit salad, dry lemon grass, essential oils of kaffir lime leaves, moringa, lemon grass;
- Condiments: cane sugar, chili paste, coconut juice, coconut milk/cream/powder, coffee, fish sauce, fruit juice, green and red curry pastes, Hom Mali rice vinegar, honey, rice vinegar, roasted chili paste, sunflower oil, sweet chili sauce, tapioca starch, Thai herbs, virgin coconut oil;
- Processed food;
- Frozen shrimp;
- Beverages: tea and coffee

What new organic products will Thailand introduce in the near future?

More new products are coming out to cater for the increasing demand such as organic soap and organic cotton. Also likely to be introduced soon are organic asparagus juice, jasmine rice vinegar, organic fish sauce, organic cooking chili paste, galangka soup base (sometimes called "Thai ginger," galangka is a key ingredient in Tom Kah Kai, chicken and coconut milk soup), and soup base for Tom Yum Kung (a spicy prawn soup that is one of the most famous dishes in Thai cuisine).

How long has Thailand been a producer of organic products?

Modern organic agriculture was introduced in Thailand in 1991 through the Organic Rice Project in Chiangrai province. However, organic agriculture as a way of life, principles and worldview dates back about 100 years.

Who produces Thai organic products?

There are two categories of organic producers in Thailand, private sector producers and grassroots support groups and cooperatives. The private sector group includes producers with single farmers, small holders who work in a grower groups or on a common organic project, and large-scale cooperative farms. The second category consists of non-governmental organizations that help farmers to convert their farms to organic farming.

How do Thai farmers compete with private companies growing organic products?

In addition to organic production, many private companies subcontract farmers to ensure qualified organic operations. In return, these companies provide technical and often financial support to the subcontracted farmers.

What is the most common Thai organic export?

Rice is the most exported crop, followed by fruits, baby corn, herbs and spices.

Where does Thailand export its organic products?

Thai organic products are exported to the EU, Japan and the United States. Their total value is US$10.6 million.

This material is distributed by Global Communicators, LLC, on behalf of the Office of Agricultural Affairs, Royal Thai Embassy. Additional information is available at the Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

What are Thailand's primary organic crops?

About 70 percent of certified organic farms produce jasmine rice. Another 20-25 percent produce fruits and vegetables, e.g., jack fruits, papaya, mango, asparagus, and baby corn.

Do Thai companies participate in Fair Trade and Social Responsibility programs?

A number of Thai companies are committed to social responsibility and practice Fair Trade. Among the Fair Trade products being produced are organic rice, jasmine rice and coffee. The Thai Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives supports Fair Trade programs under which farmers are guaranteed a living wage, have fair labor conditions, and manage their own production.

What Thai organic products has USDA approved for the U.S. market?

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) has approved many Thai organic products which already are exported to the United States. These products primarily are coffee, rice, and coconut derivatives.

What is Thailand doing to expand USDA National Organic Product certification for its products?

USDA is doing the final review of the Thai Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives' request to be authorized to certify products under NOP. Once approved by USDA, Thailand will become the seventh country in the world with a government agency that has authority to certify products as meeting NOP standards and grant the USDA organic log to those products.

What is Thailand doing to expand organic farming and meet international standards?

Long recognized as one of the world's major producers and exporters of food, Thailand has worked to increase the nation's agricultural production during the past decade and strived to improve the sustainability of its agriculture by increasing protection for the environment and natural resources, improving food quality, and enhancing food security through improved production techniques, including organic agriculture.

Since 2003, the Thai government has launched several national programs under which Thai farmers have been encouraged to adapt local organic practices that meet international requirements for quality and safety. In 2004, the Thai cabinet announced a National Organic Agricultural Agenda.

The agenda covers attention to food safety, farmer safety, reclamation of ecosystems and natural resources, foreign currency savings, and protection of consumer health.

Among the goals of the National Agenda are to strengthen accreditation and certification systems to meet international requirements and to develop approximately 3,200 hectares for production of organic crops, livestock, and aquaculture by 2009.

The plan includes cutting chemical use nationwide in half by the end of 2006 and increasing national production and value of organic products. Eliminating the use of chemicals in agriculture, to meet organic requirements, has received public support as a result of government public awareness programs.

The Thai government has established national organic standards in accordance with the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO)/World Health Organization (WHO) guidelines and the International Federation of Organic Agriculture Movements (IFOAM)'s basic standards for production, processing, labeling, and marketing organically produced foods or products.

As part of the agenda, a large number of Thai government agencies are involved in production, accreditation, certification, and marketing of organic crop products. For example, three departments within the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives (MOAC) are responsible for production of organic crops, livestock, fisheries, and poultry, while the Agricultural Commodity and Food Standards (ACFS) is responsible for accreditation.
